The biochemical changes in the chemical composition of the carotid body were studied by the spectral analysis technique in the blood and tissues of carotid bodies from patients with various degrees of arterial hypertension. The alterations of the biochemical composition of the tissues in patients with high arterial blood pressure is not associated with disturbances of the enzyme metabolism. The increase in the metabolism of collagenous and noncollagenous substances in the tissues of carotid bodies and their dependence on the degree of arterial blood pressure are observed., and I'm hungry. After dashing to his room, I come back downstairs, decide to do some research. I sit down in front of his computer and decide to make a list of the resources available in my area to help raise funds. It is a small list, but when all is said and done, it will amount to a lot of money. When I get home, I throw all the stuff from lunch into a bag and throw it in the garbage. I head into the kitchen and pull out a bottle of wine. I pour myself a glass and sit down to dinner. It is a good night. A very, very good night. Friday, June 22, 2007 Have you ever been on a flight to a destination you've never been to before, and when the plane lands, you notice the air is full of little paper bags? And when you look around and see that the little paper bags are everywhere, you begin to wonder why it's necessary for all of us to bring our own water bottles? I know it's annoying, but why can't they just provide one of those little gizmos in the little gizmos area in every seat? And why do we all have to bring our own bottles anyway? I'm sitting in a Newark terminal. My flight to Austin is landing in about an hour, and as I sit there sipping my lukewarm Coke, I'm thinking about my first flight to Austin.
