Say I have a list of 10,000 items in a database. I'm going to be searching this list often for things to display. It seems like a reasonable thing to do is to insert each item into the database when it's added to the list. However, this would require me to update every single item that has been added, and with 10,000 items, it seems like that's unnecessary. Instead, I'm wondering if there is a way to keep a running order of the items? What I would do is, every time an item is added, I would look at all the items after it and if it matches something, I would make it the new one. This seems really inefficient, though. Is there a better way to do this? A: Your design is broken. You can only create order in real time. In terms of efficiency, what you are describing is effectively a "first in first out" sort, which is usually the most inefficient sort. You could create an index on your field that lists which items have been added, and then use that index to find the most recent added item. Takahara River The is a river in Yamaguchi Prefecture, Japan. Geography The river flows through a hilly area of the mountains of the Akaiishi Plateau. Its outflow, the Kawahara River, is the boundary between Naka and Shimane Prefectures. History The river has been known since ancient times, and was referred to as. It was once the boundary of the domains of Yamato (southern Honshu, the Sea of Japan) and Kibi (southern Kyushu). It has been noted for its abundance of salmon.
